As published in the WCI Capital Currents:

We've all heard a lot about "infrastructure" over the last several years, and there was rejoicing when the actual legislation was finally signed into law on November 15. Now the buzzword about the legislation is it's a "once-in-a-generation" opportunity to address shortfalls among all sectors of infrastructure. That's not an understatement; as you look back in history, there are very few pieces of legislation that have touched so many different classes of infrastructure in one bill.

Many people did a lot of hard work over many years to make this opportunity a reality for our inland waterways lock and dam infrastructure. All told, hundreds of miles of walking Capitol Hill, educating lawmakers, hosting Congressional staff and elected officials on boats and at facilities, participating in editorial board meetings, outreach through our digital grassroots efforts, and spreading the word on social media to advance the message paid off tremendously. WCI owes a debt of gratitude to its members and partners for everything you have done to position inland waterways infrastructure to achieve this win.

By now, you've probably heard that $2.5 billion of full federal funding has been provided to inland waterways construction and modernization. When the $2.5 billion is coupled with annual appropriations, there is the potential for almost two-thirds of the 15-project portfolio of authorized projects currently in the queue to be completed in the next five years.

Enjoy a well-deserved victory lap, but now it's time to keep our foot on the gas to advocate to the Administration that the Capital Investment Strategy (CIS) be followed in the Corps' spend plan, set for release around January 15. We encourage you to go to the WCI Action Center on our website and send a letter to the Administration advocating that the CIS be followed.

Also as notified by WCI; Due to Capitol Hill remaining closed to visitors, WCI has cancelled its in-person February Washington meetings. Meetings with Members of Congress will be held virtually in the coming months after the February Board meeting. More information and registration for the Congressional virtual meetings will be forthcoming.
